

A few weeks ago, people said that Marco Verratti, a soccer player for Paris Saint-Germain, wants to leave the team after this season. He has been with them for a long time but now wants to try something new. He wanted to join Real Madrid, another soccer team, but they said they don't want him.

But there is some new information now. A newspaper called L'Equipe says that Verratti might still have a chance to join Real Madrid. The coach of Real Madrid, Carlo Ancelotti, might want to sign him if he stays as the coach next season. Verratti played for Ancelotti before, and Ancelotti was the one who brought him to PSG.

Ancelotti seems interested in having Verratti back on his team. Verratti has played a lot of games for PSG and has a lot of experience. He could be a great addition to Real Madrid's midfield.

Real Madrid is also planning to sign Jude Bellingham, another young player, but they might need more midfielders because two of their current players, Toni Kroos and Luka Modric, might leave in a few years. Verratti could be a good choice for Real Madrid.

Verratti can bring his experience and leadership to guide the young midfielders like Bellingham, Eduardo Camavinga, and Aurelien Tchouameni.

But it's important to know that Real Madrid and PSG don't have a good relationship. This might make it really hard for them to agree on Verratti moving to Real Madrid this summer.
